Upper Columbia River Region Highlights

The mighty Columbia River flows through Okanogan Country and creates some of the state’s best fisheries and water recreation opportunities. The famous Grand Coulee and Chief Joseph Dams create lakes along the river’s path, and the waters of the Columbia fill Banks Lake as well. Each of these lakes offer year-round fishing and also create recreation destinations featuring water access, boating and jetskiing, parks, campgrounds, and golfing.

Rufus Wood Lake—Located upstream of Chief Joseph Dam, Rufus Woods Reservoir is 51 miles long with a year-round open season including trout and kokanee, walleye, yellow perch and smallmouth bass. There is a state park with camping and boat launching facilities, two nearby golf courses (Gamble Sands and Lakewoods Golf Course) and an Army Corps of Engineers hunting access area with boat launch. Free tours. www.corpslakes.com

Banks Lake—Banks Lake is a 27-miles-long, mile-wide reservoir formed by the North Dam near Grand Coulee and the Dry Falls Dam near Coulee City and is filled with water from Lake Roosevelt (part of the Columbia River). Most of the shoreline is ringed with basalt cliffs and talus slopes, rocky outcrops and shrub-steppe habitat. There are about 23 islands in the reservoir from one to several acres in size. Steamboat Rock, in the northern part of the lake, has varied wildlife and birdwatching opportunities, including common loons, bald eagles, mule deer and peregrine falcons.

Lake Roosevelt—The upper Columbia River gorge, within which Lake Roosevelt is a national recreation area spanning three areas: the Okanogan Highlands, the Kootenay Arc, and the Columbia Plateau, each of them featuring completely distinct geographic features and creating an incredibly diverse region. Lake Roosevelt Reservoir was created in 1941 by the completion of Grand Coulee Dam. Includes 130 miles of water, 27 campgrounds, 22 boat launches, 10 swim beaches, and historical sites such as Fort Spokane Visitor Center and Museum and St. Paul’s Mission. For more info call Lake Roosevelt National Recreational Area: (509) 633-9441.

Lake Pateros —Located upstream of Wells Dam, this twenty (20) mile long reservoir contains a variety of fish species, but it is noted for Steelhead, summer Chinook, and Sockeye salmon fisheries. Largemouth Bass, Smallmouth bass and Walleye are also available.

The Grand Coulee Dam—At an awe-inspiring span of 5,223 feet, the Grand Coulee Dam is the largest concrete structure and largest electricity-producing facility in the United States. North America’s largest outdoor laser light show is projected nightly onto the face of the Dam from Memorial Day through the end of September, and a Fourth of July pyrotechnic show is launched every year from its top. A Visitor Information Center at the Dam offers information and free tours.
